Speaker A: If you ask me, I think going to the gym is a bad idea. You can watch numerous videos on YouTube free of charge, or you can buy discs with classes of aerobics or yoga – they are really cheap. If you are a fan of training simulators or machines – again, you can buy your favorite ones. There are some small ones and they don't look so expensive if you compare the prices with the ones for season ticket at a gym – plus, you save time as you stay at home.

Speaker B: If you ask me, I think everybody should attend a gym, if he or she wants to be healthy and fit. However, it's not an easy task to choose a good gym. There are so many of them. Sorry to say, choosing a gym, many people only consider the location. That means – if it's convenient to get there. That's not a very wise approach. You should look for very highly qualified coaches and good training simulators, clean halls, and polite receptionists.

Speaker C: In my opinion, it goes without saying that one should go in for sports. The question is if we can do it at home on our own, or should we attend a gym. Everybody decides for themselves, but I think it's much better to attend a gym. Why? Well, you see – it's not simple enough to do some exercise. It's important to do it correctly. If you do it in the wrong way, you risk getting an injury or a trauma. A professional coach can help avoid mistakes.

Speaker D: I know going to the gym may seem more expensive compared to working out at home, but I just can't make myself to do any exercise at home. Every time I want to try to do some exercise, I find something else to do. There's either a good film to see, or my mum needs help urgently, or my friends drop in unexpectedly. There is always something or somebody to prevent me from working out, or disturb me. Gyms and fitness clubs are much better.

Speaker E: In my opinion, gyms are very dangerous places, and attending them can ruin your health. First of all, most gyms do not ask for medical permission to work out, and you may not be aware of some health problems of yours, so you risk developing one, or making the existing problem even worse. Plus, I'm not sure about the hygiene in such places – it all depends on the cleaning service, which may be unreliable. I'd rather work out at home.

Speaker F: I find gyms and fitness clubs very nice places. First of all, they provide you with everything necessary for a work out. Secondly, there is always an instructor to help you, if you do something wrong. Thirdly, there are a lot of extra services provided, like a juice bar, shops with sports clothes or food, massage, a water zone and a sauna. And the last, but not the least, everybody likes to post his or her selfies in such places to get likes from their friends.

Julie: Hi, Steve. How are you getting on? Are you enjoying your summer holidays?
Steve: Hello, Julie. It's so nice to see you. I'm okay. It's good not to have to go to school every day. No homework. Life is great.
Julie: I can understand you. I also enjoy doing nothing. Hey, you are reading something. I hope it's not a school textbook.
Steve: No, it isn't. It is a Harry Potter book, actually.
Julie: Don't you think that this series of books is for kids, not a person who is to leave school in a year?
Steve: Well, my brother Josh has just started watching Harry Potter movies. You know, he's only seven. I'm going to have to look after him anyway, so I watched a couple of films with him and I got interested.
Julie: Didn't you read about Harry Potter when you were younger?
Steve:No, I didn't. I'm probably the only person in the UK who hasn't read all the Harry Potter books.
Julie: That's probably true. Well, have you spotted many differences between the books and the films?
Steve: Not really. At the same time, this is not my purpose. I just enjoy the story itself.
Julie: Yes, the story is very positive. That's surprising indeed, considering that Joanne Rowling, you know, the lady who is the author of the Harry Potter series, well, while she was writing her first book, she was out of work, divorced and depressed. She completed her first book, but nobody wanted to publish it at first. Then she found a publishing house which agreed to publish her story.
Steve: Yes, I've heard about that. Well, if you don't succeed at first, try and try again, right? Today she is the highest earning woman in Britain. She's also the first person ever to become a billionaire from writing books.
Julie: That's true. The books have been translated into more than 60 languages as far as I know.
Steve: You seem to know a lot about Joanne Rowling, don't you?
Julie: I actually did a school project about her.
Steve: Oh Julie, can I please see it? I'm so interested in everything which is connected with Harry Potter now. Perhaps I'll be able to tell my brother some interesting facts about Harry Potter after reading your project paper.
Julie: OK. Drop by in the evening and I'll give you a copy.
Steve: Thanks Julie. You're a star.
Julie: You're welcome, Steve.

Presenter: Hello everybody. Today in the studio we have James Black, one of the most successful musicians and soundtrack writers. At 63, with a new young son, domestic bliss, and at least one blockbuster on the horizon to hit theaters soon, James is like an advertisement for a good life. Good afternoon, James.
James: Good afternoon.
Presenter: Our listeners are always interested in your everyday life. So, how's your life going? How's your family? What's your daily life like?
James: Well, it's nothing like what your listeners might expect. Usually I go to bed early because I have this young son who was born on the fourth of July this year, named Charlie, and he has a very well structured routine. In the evening, the three of us get in the bathtub at about 6:20, and then we usually order food in because our kitchen is being remodeled right now. Really, the whole house has been benefiting from our nesting instincts. In the morning I get up, feed the dog, and take it out.
Presenter: Glossy magazines have never published photos of your house or your dog. We didn't even know you've got one.
James: We've got a big red haired standard poodle named Woody Allen. We call him Woody mostly.
Presenter: Are you happy to become a father again?
James: Of course, Charlie is lovely. He's got a little safe area playroom, where I just watch him play and develop. He's starting to stand up, and has just started to say 'daddy' this last week. Then I sit with him on my lap and we play the piano a bit.
Presenter: With so many things to do, and all the responsibilities of being a father, do you manage to find time for yourself?
James: Kind of. Being fit is really important to me. I've got a kind of gym here in the house, and I do my routine and try to get my twelve thousand steps. We've got a couple of treadmills side-by-side. Sometimes we walk around the neighborhood too with Charlie and with the dog. And that's about it.
Presenter: Are you currently working on anything?
James: I go over my new script every day. I'm working on a movie that I can't really talk about, because they haven't announced what it is. I mean, the people doing it, but I work on my part every day. I like, if I have enough time, not to cram anything, but just kind of touch it every day.
Presenter: I see. I have so many questions connected with your work. When you're playing music, do you feel like it's a separate part of your brain? Do you do it for the audience who's there? Do you get better every night?
James: I like the idea of being a student, and I play with very good musicians, so playing with them allows me to get better. My aim is to get better, but I really love it for its own sake. For me, playing is very interactive, and it's improvisational. We really don't rehearse as a group, but I get these great musicians and we jam and I don't know what we're going to play until we start to play it, and then I do a lot of talking, playing with the audience.
Presenter: What is the busiest part of the day for you?
James: I generally think of it as work slash play, because it's the work of play – it's a play-time, and I like how time goes on set. It's almost like time on an airplane, or something, where people are together. It's a different, very trippy kind of time I find because you're together and imaginary time where you're out of time. You're called upon to be present, and honor what can happen in a moment. And, the whole day can go like that. The whole day can be a kind of meditation.
Presenter: Thank you, James.
